

A CHARACTERIZATION AND ANALYSIS OF THE MARYLAND ARCHEOLOGICAL SYNTHESIS DATABASE

The screenshot shows the web interface for the Maryland Archeological Synthesis Project. At the top, it features the Maryland state logo and the text 'DEPARTMENT OF PLANNING MARYLAND HISTORICAL TRUST'. Below this is a blue header with the project name and a user login status. The main content area is a search form with several input fields: 'Site Number', 'Site Name', and 'Keywords'. To the right of these fields is a 'FILTER BY SITES WITH:' section with radio buttons for 'Prehistoric Deposits', 'Historic Deposits', and 'Either'. Below the search fields are checkboxes for 'Multi-component Sites', 'Maritime Sites', 'Sites w/Dated Features', and 'Potential Slave-related Sites'. There are also dropdown menus for 'Maryland Archeological Research Unit' and 'Soils with Soil & Sediment Code'. At the bottom of the search form are 'Search' and 'Clear Form' buttons. Below the search form is a 'Browse' section with links for 'By County Map', 'By County List', and 'By Report Cover Sheet'. At the very bottom, there is a copyright notice for 2014 and a link to 'About the Synthesis Web Site'.

1.0 Introduction

This report is borne out of a desire to provide users of the Maryland Archeological Synthesis Project database with a simpler means of contextualizing archeological sites and identifying gaps in regional or statewide archeological data. The overall goal of producing this document is to provide outside researchers with comparative data that they can use to redirect investigative priorities towards data gaps, enable informed National Register evaluations, and focus research questions to target important issues for data recovery efforts. In addition, these data may provide a means by which to develop or refine predictive models for archeology. A total of 1,242 archeological sites throughout Maryland which have been subject to Phase II, Phase III or equivalent research are currently included in the database and are characterized herein. A summary discussion precedes each time-period represented in the statewide section of this report. This discussion is intended to contextualize the data and point towards interesting patterns. The patterns described are by no means exhaustive and it is MHT's hope that researchers will take this data, recognize additional trends, and develop new and interesting theories for further archeological work. These same data are then re-presented by political jurisdiction and physiographic province, along with maps depicting the distribution of these sites within each area. Finally, appendices provide the data organized by Maryland Archeological Research Unit (MARU), and major watershed, but with no accompanying discussion or mapping. This report is a "living document" that will be updated periodically as new sites are incorporated into the database and new patterns in their distribution are discovered and/or analyzed.

About the MHT Archeological Synthesis Project

The Archeological Synthesis Project was launched in 2007 by the Maryland Historical Trust Board of Trustees (with additional funding provided by the MD State Highway Administration) to begin the process of synthesizing data from the thousands of excavation projects that have been conducted in Maryland since passage of the National Historic Preservation Act of 1966 (NRHP). It consists of a searchable database that is linked to the Maryland Inventory of Historic Properties - Maryland Archeological Site Survey files, but is also tied to synopsis reports and cover sheets generated by reviewing each larger excavation project. A searchable version of the database was first published online in 2014 and is available at <https://mht.maryland.gov/secure/synthesis/>. It is important that users of this document, as well as those using the searchable online database, understand that only sites that have been subject to Phase II or Phase III investigations or publicly funded equivalent research are currently included in the database.

The Structure of this Report

This report begins with a statewide analysis of all sites included within the database. Tallies are provided of all sites by local jurisdiction, MARU, Physiographic Province, and Major (6 digit) Watershed. Next a characterization is provided of the environment types and settings within which sites have been encountered. Environmental characteristics considered include the site setting (terrestrial, partially submerged, or fully submerged), average distance to water, the type of local surface water, topographic setting, and slope gradient. Modern factors such as whether the site is in public or private ownership, last known land use, and known factors of disturbance are tallied next. A section on investigative data reports both the purposes of investigation reported for sites within the database, as well as the methods used. In addition, both the raw number and percentage of sites that proceeded from a Phase II level of investigation to Phase III data recovery is provided. Of the 1,242 sites tested statewide, 318 or 25.6% have progressed to a full data recovery effort. Finally, the chronological characteristics of the sites within the database are described at a macro level.

The numbers of sites with discrete single components vs multiple or mixed components is provided, along with the numbers of sites with historic occupation, prehistoric occupation, and conditions where discrete components could be C-14 dated, or where features could be tied to a specific dateable component are tallied.

The larger report is then broken down by time periods into the following categories and subcategories:

Prehistoric Sites	Contact-Era Sites	Colonial Sites	Late 18th &amp; 19th C.	20th C. Sites
Paleo-Indian		1630-1675	1780-1820	1900-1930
Early Archaic		1675-1720	1820-1860
Middle Archaic		1720-1780	1860-1900
Late Archaic
Early Woodland
Adena
Middle Woodland
Late Woodland

In addition to the data categories described previously, the reports by time period provide additional relevant data relating to sites for which discrete components could be identified. But this category is tricky to categorize in a systematic way. Because the record-level within the database is the “site”, and many if not most sites are multi-component, it is quite difficult to pull information out of the database that can only be applied to a specific time period without looking at each individual synthesis record for more detail. For example, the synthesis database has a field which notes the presence/absence of hearth features at prehistoric sites. However, if the site in question is multi-component, one cannot assume that the hearths recorded as being present at the site necessarily date to the time period in question. But in order to provide at least some data on site types and features that may be represented during specific periods, the final few pages of each time period report are dedicated to “single-component sites”. The user should understand that this subset of the data consists solely of those sites where all or the overwhelming majority of materials recovered appeared to be representative of a single prehistoric time period or historic occupation and spatially discrete from other artifact “noise”. This is often a judgment call by the person doing data entry and users of the database should bear that in mind. In the case of sites with both a prehistoric and historic component, it is often the case that a site would be recorded in the database as single-component because one prehistoric period predominates, and these materials are spatially discrete from later historic-period materials at the site. In the case of historic sites, a long period of continuous occupation by a single family might be considered “single-component” even if that occupations stretches across more than one of the historic time periods that are used in this document (and in MEDUSA). Researchers should be wary and use the information provided in the “Single-component” sections mostly as a finding aid and only as more than that after data have been verified by looking at the full synthesis site reports for the single-component sites listed.

Total counts of such sites are provided for each site type represented in the database (prehistoric village, hamlet, plantation, furnace, etc.). Counts are also provided for the types of features documented at the resource. Finally, the site numbers that satisfy these criteria for a given time period are provided as well as a brief overview and characterization of artifact types and features encountered. Whether or not the site was subject to data recovery is also noted.

Again, once statewide data are described, these same data are first broken down into the eight physiographic provinces of Maryland, and then by local jurisdiction. Maps of generalized site location are provided showing both physiographic province boundaries and county or city boundaries for local jurisdictions.

2.0 Statewide Discussion

The statewide data reveal one overarching trend: site selection for testing in the State of Maryland is largely being driven by development and compliance with legal mandates for the consideration of archeological resources. It has to be acknowledged up-front that the dataset, primarily sourced from Phase II and III cultural resource management (CRM) reports, is already skewed towards compliance-related work. However, both Section 106 of the NRHP and Maryland State Finance and Procurement Article §§ 5A- 325 and 5A-326, apply equally throughout the state. Yet, Anne Arundel and Prince George's County alone account for 367 or just under 30% of the 1,242 sites where testing has occurred. If Annapolis is included, the number jumps to 413, or 33%. Increased development pressure alone cannot account for this dramatic number.

Both Anne Arundel County and Prince George's County have legislative protections in place which mandate consideration for archeological resources as part of the subdivision permitting process. Likewise, both counties have strong and well-funded county archeology programs. Anne Arundel County, which is 588 square miles (173 of them water) according to the most recent census data (US Census 2010), accounts for 192 of the sites that have been subject to such testing. Montgomery County is the most populous county in Maryland, encompasses some 507 square miles, and is under enormous development pressure (US Census 2010), yet it only accounts for 57 of the 1,242 sites in the database. While Montgomery County does have an excellent archeology program run out of their county parks department, they do not have strong county-level protections in place which make consideration for archeological resources a part of the development review and permitting process.

Other counties with disproportionately high numbers of tested sites, include Frederick County (108 Sites) and St. Mary's County (99). In the case of Frederick County, these numbers are assumed to be development driven. The large number of sites tested in Saint Mary's county, is thought to be due to the presence of both the National Historic Landmark of Saint Mary's City, and the active Anthropology research program at St. Mary's College of Maryland.

By Maryland Archeological Research Unit, MARUs 7, 8, and 11, are over-represented in the sample. These correspond to the Gunpowder-Middle-Back-Patapsco-Magothy-Severn-South-Rhode-West River Drainages (MARU 7), the Riverine Patuxent Drainage (MARU 8), and the Riverine Potomac Drainage (MARU 11) with 243, 118, and 144 sites within the sample respectively. These locations correspond to the I-95 corridor east to the Chesapeake Bay from near the Baltimore-Harford County Line south to Chapel Point. This is some of the most heavily developed real estate in Maryland. Land Use/Land Cover data available from the Maryland Department of Planning reveal that substantial portions of these MARU units are dedicated to Medium and High-density Residential development, Commercial and Industrial development, School and Institutional properties, Transportation infrastructure, and other developed lands. Unsurprisingly, the Western Shore Coastal Plain physiographic province, which encompasses MARUs 7, 8, and 11, includes 698 (or over 56%) of the sites in the database. And the Patuxent River (224 sites), Patapsco River (164), Washington Metro (146), and Lower Potomac (144) watersheds contain the highest percentages of sites.

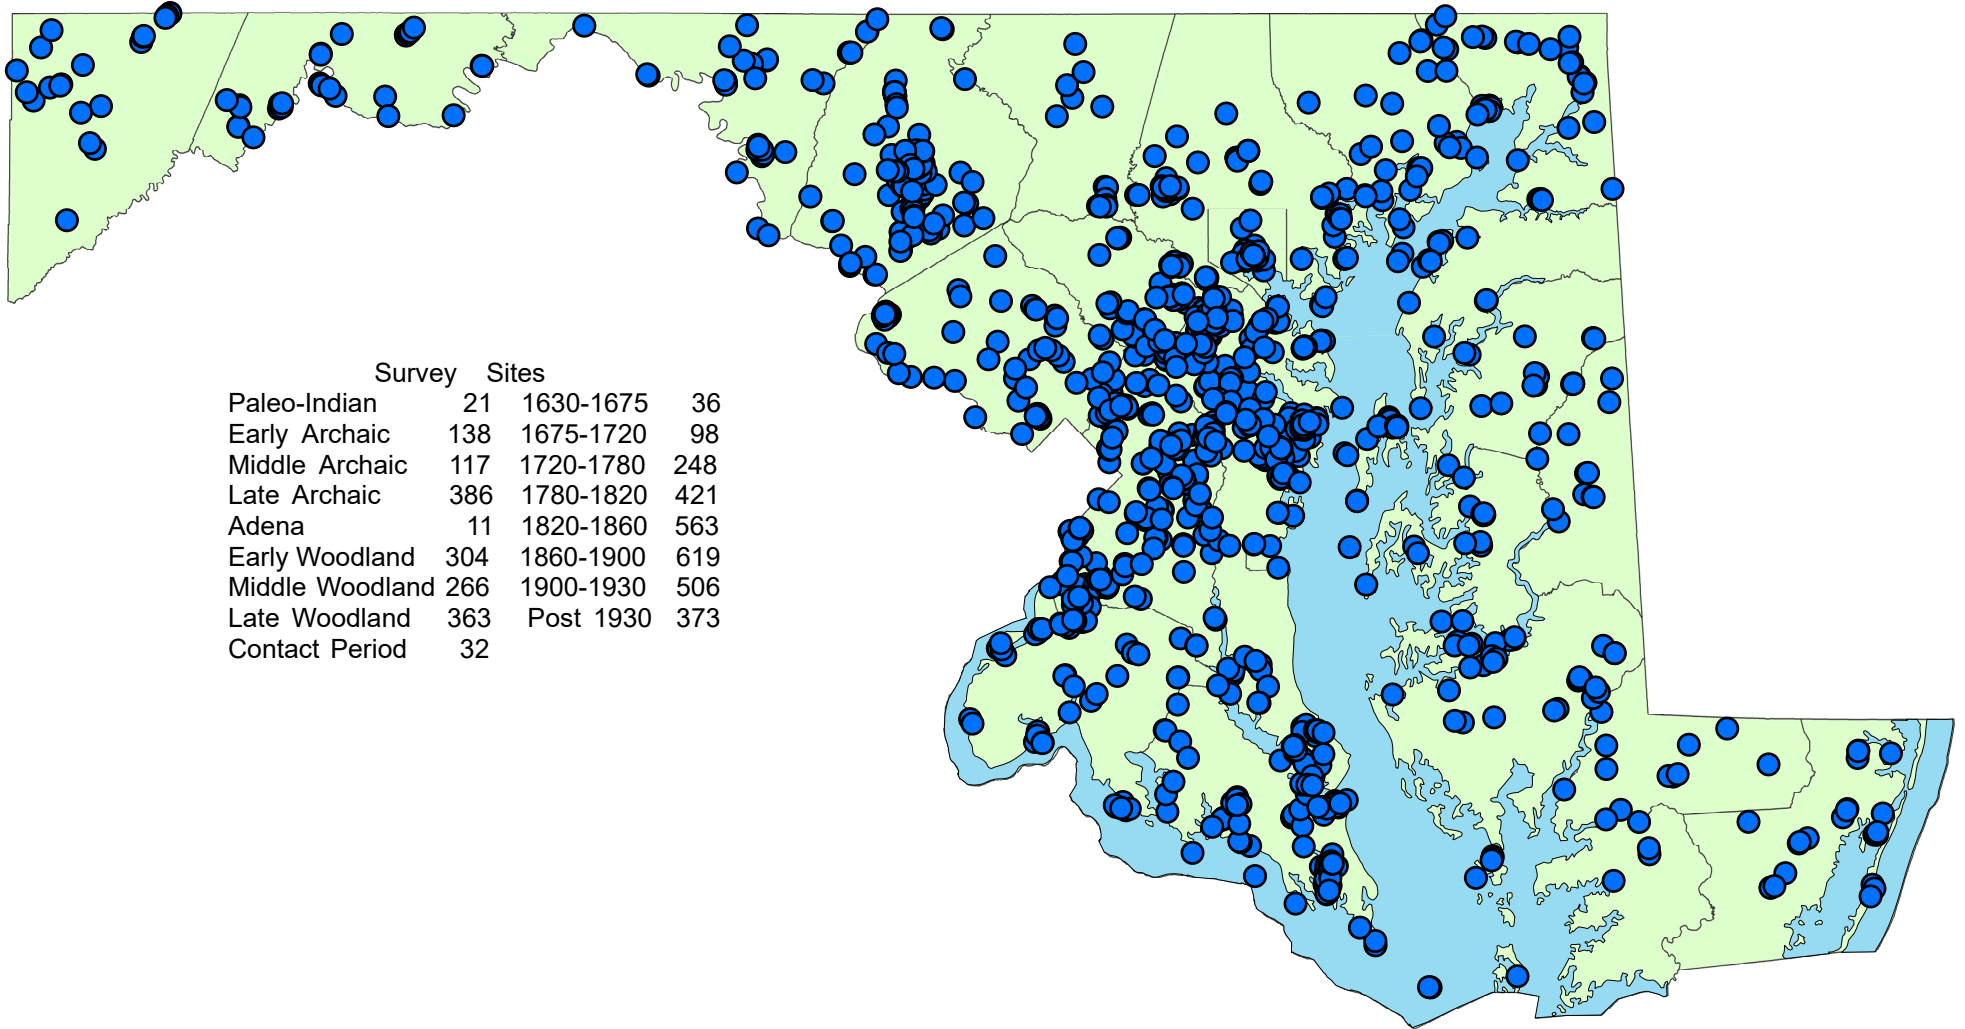

These patterns are pointed out as a cautionary tale, lest too much be read into the distribution of sites and site types around the state as represented in the synthesis database. Economic development pressures, in concert with legislative requirements (whether federal, state, or local) are the driving factors behind the sampling of sites available in the database. This must be kept at the forefront of the user's mind when interpreting these data.

The vast majority of sites within the database are in a dry terrestrial setting, comprising nearly 98% of the sample. Only 16 of the sites that have been subject to testing are listed as partially submerged, while 22 are fully submerged. Most sites are situated on low terraces within or near the floodplain of a freshwater stream or river. A little over half (55% or 686 sites) are situated on nearly level or gently sloping landforms, varying from 0 to 6% slopes. Most of the sites (677) are privately owned, or were the last time that site records were updated. The most common land uses at tested sites, at the time site data were recorded, were woodlands/forest (469 sites), active agriculture (346), or overgrown land that had been cleared previously (284). These categories are not mutually exclusive, and consultants can, and frequently do encounter multiple land uses at a given site. Most sites have been subject to plowing at some point in the past.

Investigative data reported for these sites, again, reveals that legal compliance is the overwhelming driver for their documentation. While there are 1,242 sites in the database, many of which may have been subject to multiple investigations with varying motivations behind them, 911 or 73% have been subject to some form of compliance-driven archeology. Unsurprisingly, test unit excavation is quite common (862 sites), as the sample of sites is made up of properties subject to Phase II testing, Phase III data recovery, or equivalent levels of research. Either test unit excavation or mechanical excavation (usually followed by controlled hand excavation) would be expected as the standard for this level of documentation. Interestingly, systematic shovel testing is used far more frequently as a component of site documentation than surface collection. This is likely a reflection of the modern-day prevalence of no-till or shallow tilling agricultural methods, which bring fewer artifacts to the surface and to the attention of archeologists. Of the 1,242 sites tested statewide, 318 or 25.6% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research.

Prehistoric Sites

Paleo-Indian Sites

A total of 777 sites with prehistoric components present are included in the database. Of these, only 21 (or a little less than 3%) have evidence of a Paleo-Indian component. The geographic spread of Paleo sites appears to be fairly even, ranging from western Maryland to the Eastern shore. Anne Arundel and Frederick counties have more documented Paleo-Indian sites included in the database. Most of the Paleo sites throughout the state are from terrestrial locations and within 84 meters of fresh water, and situated on floodplain terraces. Nine investigations were carried out due to legal compliance projects, while 7 investigations were for “pure” or academic research. Other drivers include avocational archeology (3 instances), site inventory (1), and MHT grant projects (2). Of the 21 such sites tested statewide, 9 (or about 43%) proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of investigation. Only one site, the Linthicum 1 lithic scatter, appeared to have a relatively isolated Paleo component. No features have been reported at any of the Paleo-Indian sites incorporated into the database.

Archaic Sites

A total of 138 sites, or just under 18% of all sites in the database, bear evidence of an Early Archaic occupation. Their distribution across the state mirrors the distribution of all statewide data, with Anne Arundel and Prince George's standing out at 26 and 24 sites respectively, with slightly lower numbers of sites in Saint Mary's (14), Frederick (13), and Charles (9) counties. No Early Archaic sites have been identified in Annapolis, Baltimore City, or Carroll, Harford, Kent, Somerset, or Wicomico counties. The vast majority of these sites are terrestrial, though 3 sites are either fully or partially submerged. Freshwater locales are generally within 95 meters of water, while saltwater locales are within 47 meters. Those saltwater locations are largely estuarine bay or tidal river environments. Most Early Archaic sites are on the floodplain terraces of freshwater streams and rivers. Again, legal compliance has driven most of the investigation of these sites (93 instances), while pure research and avocational investigations were each the motivation for work on 24 projects. Of the 138 Early Archaic sites tested statewide, 43 or just over 31% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Eleven sites had relatively discrete Early Archaic components, with short-term camps reported in 9 instances, base camps in 3, and lithic scatters in 5 cases. In a few cases there is overlap between lithic scatters and resource procurement/quarrying sites. No features have been reported at any of the Early Archaic sites incorporated into the database.

One hundred and seventeen Middle Archaic occupations (about 15% of the 777 total prehistoric) are represented at sites within the database. Their geographic distribution across the state is very similar to that of Early Archaic sites, though there is at least some representation in Carroll and Harford counties. With the exception of one partially submerged resource, all of the Middle Archaic sites are reportedly on dry land. On average, those near freshwater sources are within 97 meters of water, while those in saltwater locales are within 42 meters of water. Most of the sites (96) are situated on the floodplain terraces of freshwater rivers or streams. Rockshelter sites within the database increased three-fold from 1 site represented during both the Paleo-Indian and Early Archaic periods, to 3 sites in the Middle Archaic. Legal compliance (in 83 instances) is the motivation behind the vast majority of the investigations, but avocational archeology (as opposed to pure research) is the second most-often cited motivation (20 instances) for conducting research at the Middle Archaic sites within the database. Of 117 sites tested statewide, 31 or approaching 27% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Eleven locations appear to be single-component Early Archaic sites, representing short-term camps in 9 instances, base camps in 2, lithic scatters in 4 cases, a quarry in 1, and a single unidentified site type. Again, there is overlap in some site types. Features reported at these sites include postmolds, flaked stone clusters, refuse/storage pits, and hearths.

Late Archaic occupations are represented at an astonishing number of sites within the database; 386 sites (or just under 50%) to be exact. Nearly 60% of them are on the western shore coastal plain in Anne Arundel (77 sites), Prince Georges (66), and St. Mary's (33) counties. Only the heavily developed urban centers of Annapolis and Baltimore City have not yielded any examples of Late Archaic occupation. Only one Late Archaic site is known from a fully submerged context. The remainder are terrestrial sites, but 5 were partially submerged at the time they were reported to MHT. Freshwater locales are at a slightly higher average distance from water; as much as 106 meters away. Saltwater locales are as far as 60.5 meters away. Local surface water is, once again, primarily freshwater rivers and streams, with estuarine bay or tidal river environments present most often when local surface water is reported as salty or brackish. Low terraces on these river floodplains predominate, but hilltop and hillslope settings are not uncommon. The number of rockshelter sites represented in the database for the Late Archaic period remains 3. Legal compliance (286 instances), avocational archeology (55 instances), and pure research (51 instances) remain the most oft cited drivers for fieldwork. Of the 386 sites tested statewide, only 95 or nearly 25% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Seventy-four sites appear to be largely single-component, with site types represented ranging from villages (1 example) to short-term camps (43), lithic scatters (34), quarries (11), base camps (10), shell middens (1), or other/unknown types (3). As elsewhere, site types may overlap as researchers may record multiple impressions. Reported features include middens, postmolds, earthen or stone mounds/cairns, flaked stone clusters, refuse/storage pits, hearths, burials, and other/unidentified structures.

A total of 34 sites are recorded simply as "Archaic" sites, with no further chronological refinement. This represents about 4% of the overall prehistoric sample and 5% of the full Archaic sample. Most of these sites were recorded in Prince George's County (8 sites), or Frederick County (4 sites), but there is a smattering recorded throughout the state. All 34 sites are terrestrial with freshwater hydrology, on average, less than 88 meters away. However, when saltwater is the local surface water, it is on average 254 meters away. These generalized Archaic sites are most often reported on the low terraces of freshwater stream/river floodplains. Most of these sites were investigated because of legal compliance (cited in 18 instances), pure research (11), or avocational archeology (9). Of the 34 such sites tested statewide, 10 or about 29% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Only 9 are reported to be single-component sites, and site types are recorded as short-term camps (4 sites), lithics scatters (4 sites), quarries (2), and other (2). Only 1 feature is reported from one of these sites.

Site Number: 18AG148

Name: Whittaker I

Description: Late Middle Archaic - Late Archaic short-term camp site

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ceramic sherds, and possibly other unreported artifacts. Lithic raw materials included chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, other raw materials (cherty siltstone), and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18AN1405

Name: Zebbron

Description: 19th-20th century farmstead; Middle Archaic short-term camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, use-modified or other lithics, and possibly other unreported artifacts. Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18BA354

Name: Dolfield

Description: Middle or Late Archaic short-term resource procurement camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts. Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, quartz, and possibly materials that were not reported.

\ Site was subject to Phase III data recovery*

---

Site Number: 18CE154

Name: 10001-2

Description: Archaic short-term resource procurement

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts. Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, quartz, steatite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18CH665

Name: Homeland Prehistoric

Description: Archaic lithic scatter, short-term resource procurement, 19th-20th century artifact scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts. Lithic raw materials included quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18CV350

Name: Field Locus # 21

Description: Early-Mid 18th century house site; Middle Archaic lithic scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Dated Feature(s): 18th century animal pen/enclosure

\ Site was subject to Phase III data recovery*

---

Site Number: 18FR615

Name: Tuscarora M & R

Description: Middle & Late Archaic short-term resource procurement

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Dated Feature(s): Feature 5 - a large circular pit containing a hearth.

† Radiocarbon Assays have been performed on samples from this site

‡ Flotation samples were collected from this site

---

Site Number: 18GA292

Name: Wall 50

Description: Early Archaic short-term camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, other raw materials (siltstone), and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18PR953

Name: Vineyards

Description: Middle & Late Archaic camps and resource procurement sites

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18ST673

Name: P-1

Description: Middle Archaic short-term resource procurement, late 18th to mid-19th century artifact scatter/possible dump

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, unknown items, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included some unknown material, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

---

Site Number: 18WA462

Name: A-1

Description: Middle-Late Archaic short-term resource procurement

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, use-modified or other lithics, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, rhyolite, quartz, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18CH335

Name: G-17 Chas. Co. Landfill

Description: Late Archaic lithic scatter/short-term resource procurement camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, quartz, quartzite, sandstone, silicified sandstone, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18CH376

Name: Area A-1, Site F

Description: Late Archaic base camp, 18th century and mid-19th to 20th century artifact scatters

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ground stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, chalcedony, sandstone, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18CH378

Name: Area A-1, Site L

Description: Late Archaic base camp, late 18th-early 19th century tenant farmstead

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ground stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, other raw materials (possible amphibolite, slate), and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18CH665

Name: Homeland Prehistoric

Description: Archaic lithic scatter, short-term resource procurement, 19th-20th century artifact scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18CH735

Name: P-SCO-36

Description: Late Archaic lithic scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18CH745

Name: P-LJB-39

Description: Terminal Archaic/Early Woodland transitional (Rossville) lithic scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, use-modified or other lithics, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, sandstone, other raw materials (metamorphic), and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18CR196

Name: LS-1

Description: Late Archaic steatite quarry, processing station

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ground stone objects, stone bowls, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, steatite, silicified sandstone, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Woodland Sites

The Early Woodland is represented at 304 of the 777 prehistoric sites within the synthesis database (or just over 39%). Over 62% of these sites are situated on the western shore coastal plain, and again, the majority are in Anne Arundel (72 sites), Prince George's (40), and St. Mary's (32) counties. There are no recorded Early Woodland sites within the synthesis database in Annapolis, Carroll County, and Somerset County. Of the 304 Early Woodland sites, 302 are recorded as being fully terrestrial sites, 4 are described as partially submerged, and 1 is reportedly fully submerged. Freshwater locales are on average around 91 meters from water, while saltwater locations are on average 72 meters from the shoreline. As usual, sites are most often situated on the floodplain terraces of freshwater streams. And when local surface hydrology is predominantly saltwater, it is most often an estuarine bay or tidal river setting. The number of Early Woodland rockshelter sites in the database falls to just 2. Two hundred and eight times legal compliance was cited as a motivating factor behind investigation, while pure research was recorded 52 times, and avocation archeology was recorded 48 times. All other motivating factors were relatively minor contributors. Of 304 sites tested statewide, 89 or just over 29% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. A total of 27 sites had discrete Early Woodland components, including 19 short-term camps, 13 lithic scatters, 3 shell middens, 3 quarries, 2 base camps, and 1 other site type. There is considerable overlap in site types as more than one type is often recorded for a given site. Identified features included middens, shell middens, refuse/storage pits, and other/unidentified structures.

The Middle Woodland is represented by 266 archeological sites within the database, or about 34% of the prehistoric sample. Over 62% (166) of these sites are known from the western shore coastal plain. Sixty-seven are from Anne Arundel County, 31 are from Prince George's, and 27 are from St. Mary's. Only Carroll County has produced no Middle Woodland sites that have been subject to Phase II, equivalent or more intensive levels of investigation. Only one of the 266 sites is described as fully submerged and no longer terrestrial, but 5 have been recorded as "partially submerged". Freshwater locales are, on average, 95.5 meters from water, while saltwater locales are closer, at an average of around 68 meters from water. Sites were generally situated on the low terraces of freshwater streams and rivers. Estuarine bay and tidal river locations were also frequently encountered (though less than half as many times as sites where local hydrology was a freshwater stream). Three sites are rockshelters. Legal compliance is cited as the primary driver for excavation work in 173 instances. Pure research is cited 51 times, and avocational archeology is listed 43 times. Of 266 sites tested statewide, 82 or nearly 31% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. A total of 22 sites were single-component or had discrete Middle Woodland components, including 9 shell middens, 8 short-term camps, 4 lithic scatters, 3 base camps, 2 recorded villages, 2 hamlets, and 3 other site types. Identified features include shell middens, postmolds, ceremonial areas, flaked stone clusters, refuse/storage pits, hearths, and other/unidentified features.

A small number of sites (11) with Adena or Adena-like components have been reported in Maryland and included in the synthesis database. These represent just slightly more than 1% of the entire prehistoric sample of 777 sites. Interestingly, these are better known from the eastern shore coastal plain. Five sites are reported from the eastern shore coastal plain, with one each reported from Caroline, Dorchester, Queen Anne's, Talbot, and Worcester Counties. Three sites are also known from the western shore (in Anne Arundel County and Annapolis), and 2 are documented in Garrett County. All 11 sites are in a terrestrial setting. Freshwater locales are, on average, just over 53 meters away from surface water, while saltwater locales are closer to 70 meters away. Thus, Adena components appear to be present on sites that are, on average, much closer to surface water than is the norm across the prehistoric sample. Local surface water is relatively even, with 6 sites recorded as freshwater streams or river settings, and 6 sites recorded as either estuarine bay/tidal river (5 sites) or tidal marsh (1) settings. The low terraces of floodplains are most common topographically. Legal compliance is not the predominant driver leading to excavation work at Adena sites. Pure research and avocational archeology are both cited in 5 instances, while legal compliance, MHT grant-funded projects, and other motivations are each listed twice. Of the 11 sites tested statewide, only 2 or a little over 18% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Only 1 single component site is included in the database, the Back Cove site in Annapolis. That site is a small shell midden or hamlet where an Adena ceremonial area was identified.

A total of 363 sites are included in the Late Woodland sample within the synthesis database. This represents nearly 47% of the prehistoric sample. Only the Late Archaic is better-represented. Nearly 61% of the Late Woodland sites are situated on the western shore coastal plain, with 70 sites located in Anne Arundel County, 51 in Prince George's, and 41 in St. Mary's. There are no recorded Late Woodland sites in the synthesis database which are situated in Baltimore City or Carroll County. All but one of the 363 sites are recorded as terrestrial sites, with four of them being partially submerged. One site is recorded as fully submerged. On average, those near freshwater sources are within 93.4 meters of water, while those in saltwater locales are within 81 meters of water. This represents a considerable increase in the average distance to local surface water at saltwater locales. As usual, the low terraces of floodplains are the predominate topographic setting for Late Woodland sites. There is a marked increase in rockshelter sites (6 sites as compared to 2 or 3 in most other periods) in the Late Woodland sample. Freshwater stream and river locations are recorded over twice as often as estuarine bay or tidal river locations (222 to 107). Legal compliance (246 instances), pure research (62 instances), and avocational archeology (60 instances) remain the most oft cited drivers for fieldwork. Of 363 sites tested statewide, 110 or just over 30% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Fifty-seven sites appear to have discrete Late Woodland components or are single component sites. Recorded site types include 20 short-term camps, 12 lithic scatter, 10 shell middens, 7 hamlets, 5 base camps, 4 villages, 3 rockshelters or caves, and 1 submerged Late Woodland site. Thirteen times the site type is recorded as "other", and 4 times it is unknown. Again, there is overlap in site types. Reported features include middens, shell middens, postmolds, house patterns, flaked stone clusters, refuse/storage pits, hearths, burials, and other/unidentified features.

In addition to the aforementioned prehistoric site types, 170 sites are recorded as having an unknown, generalized prehistoric component present. These represent nearly 22% of the entire prehistoric sample within the synthesis database. Their distribution seems to reflect the general trend of prehistoric sites: mostly known from the western shore coastal plain and predominantly from Anne Arundel (28 sites) and Prince George's (25) counties. One site appears to have not had a site setting reported to MHT, but of the remaining 169 sites, all are recorded as terrestrial locales. Freshwater locations are an average of 153 meters from surface water, while saltwater locations are a mean of just over 203 meters away. This suggests that these prehistoric sites where no diagnostic material is being encountered may represent peripheral locations. Topographic settings are much more varied than the norm. The terraces of floodplains are still the most common locations, but upland flats, hilltop and bluff, hillslope, and ridge settings are recorded far more frequently with these sites. Freshwater streams and rivers are, by far, the most common form of local surface water (141 instances compared to 20 for estuarine bay/tidal river locations). A total of 134 of the 170 general prehistoric sites (or about 79%) were investigated due to legal compliance. By comparison, other motivations were relatively minor. Of the 170 sites tested statewide, 29 or just over 17% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Most of them (159 sites) are described as single prehistoric component sites. Most are reported as lithic scatters (115), with short-term camps (55 instances), quarries (13), base camps (3), shell middens (2), and other/unidentified (15) occasionally reported. Features reported include earthen mounds/stone cairns, flaked stone clusters, refuse/storage pits, hearths, ossuaries, burials, and other/unidentified features.

Site Number: 18AN1073

Name: Holladay Park #1

Description: Late Archaic and Early Woodland short-term camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, ironstone, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18AN1348

Name: Hanover Road

Description: Early Woodland lithic scatter; Mid 19th-Mid 20th century domestic artifact scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, quartz, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18BA162

Name: Route 26, #1

Description: Early to Middle Woodland short-term camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, rhyolite, quartz, chalcedony, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18CE371

Name: Warwick Prehistoric

Description: Late Archaic/Early Woodland period short-term camp; Historic artifact scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ground stone objects, fire-cracked rock, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, quartz, quartzite, ironstone, argillite, sandstone, ferruginous quartzite, other raw materials (limonite), and possibly materials that were not reported.

Detail of Single-Component Sites

Statewide Middle Woodland Sites

n= 22

Site Number: 18AG144

Name: Paw Paw

Description: Middle and Late Woodland lithics and ceramics - possible village

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ground stone objects, fire-cracked rock, ceramic sherds, miscellaneous faunal material, floral material, other objects (beads and pipe, unspecified material), and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, sandstone, other raw materials (siltstone), and possibly materials that were not reported.

Cultural features were encountered at the site.

Dated Feature(s): Feature 1 - small & shallow pit, Feature 3 - larger pit; both associated with artifacts

† Radiocarbon Assays have been performed on samples from this site

‡ Flotation samples were collected from this site

---

Site Number: 18AG166

Name: Dorsey IV

Description: Middle - Late Woodland village or hamlet

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, use-modified or other lithics, ceramic sherds, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, quartz, quartzite, other raw materials (hornfels, ironstone), and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18AN143

Name: Luce Creek

Description: Middle Woodland shell midden

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, use-modified or other lithics, ceramic sherds, faunal implements or ornaments, miscellaneous faunal material, oyster shell, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Cultural features were encountered at the site.

Dated Feature(s): Shell midden and a separate, smaller shell concentration to the south of the midden.

† Radiocarbon Assays have been performed on samples from this site

‡ Flotation samples were collected from this site

§ Soil samples were collected from this site

---

Site Number: 18AN480

Name: Quiet Waters Farm I

Description: Middle and Late Woodland shell midden and short-term resource procurement camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, use-modified or other lithics, ceramic sherds, miscellaneous faunal material, oyster shell, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, ironstone, argillite, sandstone, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Cultural features were encountered at the site.

Dated Feature(s): Middle Woodland shell midden (exclusively Mockley sherds)

* Site was subject to Phase III data recovery

---

Site Number: 18AN664

Name: Russett Peterson 17

Description: Middle-Late Woodland short-term resource procurement, lithic scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, use-modified or other lithics, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

\ Site was subject to Phase III data recovery*

Name: Beverly Triton 5

Description: Middle & Late Woodland shell midden

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, use-modified or other lithics, ceramic sherds, miscellaneous faunal material, oyster shell, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, quartz, quartzite, sandstone, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18AP12

Name: Back Cove

Description: Middle Woodland extensive shell midden, base camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ground stone objects, ceramic sherds, miscellaneous faunal material, oyster shell, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, some unknown material, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18AP20

Name: Arundel Estates

Description: Middle-Late Woodland shell midden, artifact concentration

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ceramic sherds, oyster shell, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included rhyolite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18BA162

Name: Route 26, #1

Description: Early to Middle Woodland short-term camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, rhyolite, quartz, chalcedony, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18BA483

Name: Piney Grove

Description: Middle Woodland lithic reduction site/short-term camp, late 18th-19th century artifact scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

---

Site Number: 18CE114

Name: W-T, CE-W1

Description: Middle Woodland base camp

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, use-modified or other lithics, ceramic sherds, oyster shell, floral material, other objects (charcoal), and possibly other unreported artifacts. Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported. Cultural features were encountered at the site.

Dated Feature(s): 4 adjacent storage pit features were assoc. w/ Hell Island (Middle Woodland) ceramics.

‡ Flotation samples were collected from this site

§ Soil samples were collected from this site

---

Site Number: 18CE279

Name: Long Green Farm I

Description: Early - Middle Woodland short-term resource procurement

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ceramic sherds, and possibly other unreported artifacts. Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, chalcedony, ironstone, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18CV62

Name: Ramsey Creek

Description: 19th-20th century artifact scatter, farmstead

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, oyster shell, and possibly other unreported artifacts. Lithic raw materials included quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18DO182

Name: MD 313-7/Taylor

Description: Middle Woodland scatter and late 18th and 19th century house site

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, ceramic sherds, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, rhyolite, quartz, quartzite, other raw materials (silicified slate), and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18FR652

Name: Ladson

Description: Middle Woodland lithic scatter

Contact-era Sites

Contact-era sites are rare. And, chronologically-speaking, the “era” of contact is a moving target. Many such sites are initially reported and recorded as Late Woodland sites and only later, when contact-era European trade goods are encountered do site files get updated. For this reason, there is considerable overlap in site numbers between “Contact” sites, “Colonial” sites, and some “Prehistoric” sites within the synthesis database.

Only 32 sites are recorded within the synthesis database as representative of contact between European colonists and Native peoples. Most are known from St. Mary’s (7 sites), Cecil (5), Charles (4), and Prince George’s (4) counties. Most of these are situated on the Lower Potomac watershed. All are terrestrial sites, but 2 are reported to be partially submerged. The general environmental settings of these sites appear to be quite similar to the settings of prehistoric sites. When local hydrology is predominantly freshwater, contact-era sites are within 97 meters, on average, of water. When saltwater predominates, sites are generally within 60 meters of the shore. Topographic settings are generally the low terraces of floodplains, with freshwater streams/rivers being the most common local surface water (16 instances), but not significantly more often than estuarine bay/tidal river locales (11 reported instances). Legal compliance is described as the motivation for archeological work in 14 instances, while pure research is cited 12 times, and avocational archeology is listed 9 times. Other motivating factors are much less oft-cited. Of 32 sites tested statewide, 17 or just over 53% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Eight of the 32 sites are single-component Contact-era occupations. Site types reported include hamlets (4 sites), lithic scatters (2), villages (1), and “other” site types (4). In some cases sites are categorized under more than one site type. Reported features include middens, postmolds, house patterns, refuse/storage pits, hearths, ossuaries, and burials.

Site Number: 18CE258

Name: Perry Point I-7

Description: 19th century house site, prehistoric unknown or Contact

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, other objects (flaked glass), and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

‡ Flotation samples were collected from this site

§ Soil samples were collected from this site

---

Site Number: 18CH281

Name: IH-35

Description: Late Woodland/Contact/17th century hamlet and trading post

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ceramic sherds, fired clay (non-vessel), faunal implements or ornaments, miscellaneous faunal material, floral material, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, quartz, quartzite, European flint, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Cultural features were encountered at the site.

Dated Feature(s): Feat. 1 – small pit w/ pipe frags, 4 Potomac Crk., flake, shell beads, faunal; Midden Feat. dated using pipe stem diameters & late 17th C. sherds

* Site was subject to Phase III data recovery

† Radiocarbon Assays have been performed on samples from this site

‡ Flotation samples were collected from this site

§ Soil samples were collected from this site

---

Site Number: 18CH377

Name: Area A-1, Site J

Description: 17th-18th century/Contact farmstead, Late Woodland unknown, possible Woodland-Contact village

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ground stone objects, fire-cracked rock, ceramic sherds, oyster shell, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, quartz, quartzite, and possibly materials that were not reported.

---

Site Number: 18DO43

Name: Lankford

Description: Late Woodland/Contact hamlet with burials

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ground stone objects, ceramic sherds, fired clay (non-vessel), and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included jasper, chert, quartz, quartzite, sandstone, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Cultural features were encountered at the site.

Dated Feature(s): Charcoal samples from Pit #3 Midden feature assoc. w/ Townsend ceramics

* Site was subject to Phase III data recovery

† Radiocarbon Assays have been performed on samples from this site

---

Site Number: 18FR72

Name: Heater's Island North

Description: Contact, 17th century Piscataway village

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, human remains, miscellaneous faunal material, other objects (trade items), and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included some unknown material, and possibly materials that were not reported.

* Site was subject to Phase III data recovery

---

Site Number: 18PR42

Name: Ferguson Ossuary

Description: Contact ossuary

Artifacts recovered include human remains, other objects (copper ornaments, glass beads, trade beads), and possibly other unreported artifacts.

some unknown material, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Cultural features were encountered at the site.

Dated Feature(s): Contact era ossuary dated by the inclusion of diagnostic artifacts

---

Site Number: 18SO94

Name: Golden Eagle Landing

Description: Late Woodland hamlet and 19th century artifact scatter

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, ceramic sherds, other objects (possible trade item), and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, and possibly materials that were not reported.

Site Number: 18ST1-29B

Name: West's Field Cluster B

Description: Late Woodland artifact scatter; Mid 17th century/Contact period house site

Artifacts recovered include flaked stone objects, fire-cracked rock, ceramic sherds, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Lithic raw materials included chert, quartz, quartzite, chalcedony, and possibly materials that were not reported.

* Site was subject to Phase III data recovery

§ Soil samples were collected from this site

Colonial Sites

Early Colonial Sites (1630-1675)

A total of 382 sites within the synthesis database date to periods that fall within the colonial era. Most are known from the later colonial period, rather than the earlier colonial period. Thirty-six sites (or a little over 9% of the colonial sample) fall within the period 1630-1675. Perhaps not surprisingly, St. Mary's County has produced the greatest number of sites: 16 or about 44% of the sample. Anne Arundel (6 sites), Calvert (4), and Charles (3) counties have also produced a few sites. Again, perhaps unsurprisingly, early colonial sites are rare elsewhere throughout the state, and evidence of white settlement is limited to the western shore coastal plain (33 sites) and eastern shore coastal plain (3 sites). All of the sites are described as terrestrial, but one is also recorded as partially submerged, and another is recorded as fully submerged. Freshwater locations are typically situated a little over 86 meters from surface water, while saltwater locales are, on average, only about 24 meters away. As with prehistoric sites, locations tend to be recorded as low floodplain terraces, but estuarine bay or tidal river locations predominate. Seventeen times sites are recorded as being near bay estuaries or tidal river, while freshwater stream/river locations are only recorded 10 times. However, many sites may have both environments. Eleven sites are near springs. Most of these sites were investigated due to legal compliance (reported 17 times) or pure research (14 times). Of 36 sites tested statewide, 15 or nearly 42% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Fourteen sites are recorded as single-component sites. The predominant site types recorded are domestic sites (recorded 8 times), artifact scatters (8), and buildings or foundations (6). Post-in-ground buildings are specified 5 times. Reported features include construction features, foundations, cellar holes, hearths and chimneys, postholes and postmolds, wells or cisterns, trash pits, planting features, walkways or roadways, topographic features (depressions or mounds), burials, and other feature types.

Late 17th to Early 18th-Century Colonial Sites (1675-1720)

A total of 98 sites, or nearly 26% of the colonial sample, date to the period 1675-1720. St. Mary's County continues to contribute the greatest number of sites (27) to the database for this period, followed by Prince George's County and Annapolis (at 11 sites each), and Anne Arundel County (10). Jurisdictions where no sites have been identified and included in the database are Allegany County, Baltimore City, Carroll County, Garrett County, Montgomery County, Somerset County, and Wicomico County. The sample consists of 80 sites from the western shore coastal plain, 13 sites from the eastern shore coastal plain, and 5 from elsewhere. Ninety-seven of the 98 sites are recorded as terrestrial, with 2 being partially submerged. Only 1 site is recorded as fully submerged. Average distance to water for sites of this period increases sharply over prehistoric and early colonial averages. Freshwater locales are, on average, roughly 125 meters from the nearest surface water. Saltwater locales are often nearly 180 meters away. Topographic settings continue to be, most commonly, the low terraces of floodplains, but hilltop and bluff locations are not uncommon. Estuarine bay and tidal river locations (48 instances) are the most common descriptions of the local surface water. Freshwater rivers/streams (34 instances) and springs (17) are fairly common as well. Fifty-one sites were investigated for compliance purposes and forty were investigated for pure research interest. Of the 98 sites tested statewide, 39 or almost 40% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Slightly more than half (52 of the 98 sites) are single-component sites, with the most commonly reported site types being domestic sites (44), buildings or foundations (30), and artifacts scatters (28). Reported features include construction features, foundations, cellars, hearths or chimneys, postholes and postmolds, paling ditches or fences, trash pits, sheet middens, planting features, road and walkways, topographic features, burials, and unknown or other features. Earthworks, mill infrastructure, and (obviously) railroad beds are the only historic feature categories not represented in the synthesis sample from this time period.

Late Colonial Sites (1720-1780)

The sample size expands to 248 sites (about 65% of all colonial sites) for the period from 1720 to 1780. The majority are known from St. Mary's (38 sites), Anne Arundel (34 sites), and Prince George's (33) counties. But nearly all counties are represented in the database, with the exceptions of Allegany and Garret counties. Terrestrial sites are reported 246 times, while partially submerged sites are reported 8 times, and fully submerged is only reported once. The upward trend in distance from surface water continues, with the average for freshwater locales increasing to around 161 meters, and saltwater locales increasing to an average of nearly 192 meters. Low floodplain terrace settings continue to predominate, but hilltop and bluff locations are not at all uncommon. Local surface water is recorded as a freshwater river/stream in 123 instances, and as an estuarine bay or tidal river setting in 101 instances. Springs are present at 22 sites. Legal compliance was the overwhelming driver for most investigations of these sites, with that motivation reported 161 times. Pure research was cited 65 times and MHT grants or avocational work were each listed 22 times. Of 248 sites tested statewide, 97 or just slightly more than 39% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Single components were identified at 156 of the 248 sites. The most commonly described site types among these single-component sites were domestic sites (133 sites), buildings or foundations (101) – many of which were masonry (at 55 sites) – and artifact scatters (78). However, all of the other historic site types are represented, with the exception of privies, mining and quarry-related sites, canal-related sites, bridges, fords, and encampments. All of the historic feature types documented in the synthesis database are represented.

Late 18th and 19th-century Sites

Post Revolutionary/Early Antebellum Sites (1780-1820)

A total of 421 sites of 1,603 late 18th and 19th-century archeological sites within the database, date to the period between 1780 and 1820: the post-Revolutionary, new Republic, or early Antebellum era. This represents roughly 26% of the late 18th and 19th-century sites. More (62) are known from Prince George's County than elsewhere. With Anne Arundel (50), St. Mary's (44), and Frederick (33) counties making sizable contributions to the database. All counties are represented, but only two sites (one each) have been identified in the western Maryland counties of Garrett and Allegany. Four hundred and fifteen sites are described as terrestrial, while 10 are listed as partially submerged, and 5 as fully submerged. Average distance to water continues its upward trend with time, as the average distance to surface water in freshwater locales is calculated to be about 258 meters and at saltwater locales it's calculated to be an average of 235 meters. The low terraces of floodplains are the most common topographic setting for these sites, but hilltop and bluff, hillslope, and even upland flat locations are quite frequently reported. Local surface water is reported to be a freshwater stream or river in 241 instances and an estuarine bay or tidal river in 144 cases. Springs are present on-site in 34 cases. The overwhelming majority of these 421 sites (308 instances) have had some sort of archeology conducted on them for legal compliance. Pure research is cited as a motivation for work conducted at 80 sites, but other motivating factors are far less frequent. Of 421 such sites tested statewide, 137 or about 33% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Three hundred and eight of them could be described as single-component or discrete component sites. All site types are represented in the database with the exception of privies, canal-related sites, bridges, and fords. Domestic sites (248 occurrences), buildings or foundations (198 sites) – most often reported as masonry (113 times) – and artifact scatters (155 occurrences) are the most commonly reported site types. All of the historic feature types documented in the synthesis database are represented.

Late Antebellum Sites (1820-1860)

Some 563 sites (or 35%) of the late 18th and 19th century sample within the synthesis database, date to the period from 1820 to 1860. Most of the sites (78) are documented in Prince George's county, though Anne Arundel (64 sites) and Frederick (53) counties have also contributed a sizable portion of the sample. All counties are represented during this period. Terrestrial sites are recorded in 550 instances. And partially submerged or fully submerged resources are each reported 10 times. Average distance to water stabilizes for freshwater locales, at approximately 241 meters. But for saltwater locations, the upward trend continues to an average of almost 287 meters from surface water. The low terraces of floodplains are the most common topographic setting for these sites, but hilltop and bluff, hillslope, and even upland flat locations are quite frequently reported. Local surface water is reported to be a freshwater stream or river in 338 instances and an estuarine bay or tidal river in 171 cases. Springs are present on-site an increasing number of sites (49). Legal compliance is the motivating factor behind excavation at 429 of the 563 sites from this period. Pure research projects are described in 90 cases. All other purposes of investigation are rather minor. Of 563 sites tested statewide, 166 or nearly 30% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. There are 430 sites that have discrete components and all site types are represented except privies, fords, and bridges. The most commonly reported are domestic sites (336 sites), buildings or foundations (275 sites) – most often reportedly masonry (156 cases), and artifact scatters (205 sites). All historic feature types documented in the synthesis database are represented.

Late 19th-century Sites (1860-1900)

A large sample of 619 archeological sites (or nearly 39% of late 18th and 19th-century sites) have components dating to the post-Civil War period from 1860 to 1900. Most of the sites are in Prince George's county (78 sites), Anne Arundel county (70 sites), and Frederick county (59 sites). All other counties are represented in the sample from this period. A total 604 sites are reported as terrestrial, with 12 each listed under partially or fully submerged sites. Distance to surface water in freshwater locations remains stable at an average of 242 meters distance. And distance at saltwater locales finally levels out at around 283 meters average. Topographic settings remain comparable to the preceding time period. Local surface water is described as a freshwater stream/river in 381 cases, and an estuarine bay or tidal river in 175 instances. Springs are present at 54 sites. Legal compliance is the motivating factor behind excavation at 474 of the 619 sites from this period, and pure research projects are described in 93 cases. Of 619 sites tested statewide, 169 or a little over 27% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. A total of 491 sites reportedly had single or isolated components, and all site types are documented except privies, fords, bridges, and isolated burials. Domestic sites are the most common site type described (386 instances), along with buildings or foundations (324 instances) – most are masonry (173 cases) or frame-built (130), and artifact scatters (238 instances). All historic feature types documented in the synthesis database are represented.

20th Century Sites

Sites from 1900-1930

Five hundred and six sites within the synthesis database contain components dating to the period from 1900-1930. This represents nearly 58% of the 20th-century sample. The majority of sites are situated in Anne Arundel (64 sites), Prince George's (61), and Frederick (45) counties. Only Somerset county is not represented within the sample. Almost all of these sites are terrestrial (499), but six of them are described as "partially submerged". The remaining 7 sites are fully submerged. Distance to surface water in freshwater locations falls to an average of 190 meters distance. And distance at saltwater locales remains level at 288 meters average. The low terraces of floodplains remain the most common location for sites, but not by much. Hillslopes, hilltop and bluff location, and upland flats are nearly as common. Ridgetops and other settings are not as common, but do occur. Freshwater streams or rivers are reported most often as the local surface water present at sites (326 times), with estuarine bay or tidal water reported 134 times. Springs are present at 44 early 20th-century sites. Legal compliance is the overwhelming driver for archeological work at such sites and is listed 402 times. Pure research, the next most-commonly reported investigative purpose, is only cited 74 times. Of 506 early 20th-century sites tested statewide, 129 or nearly 26% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Single-component sites appear to be present in 409 instances, with the majority representing domestic sites (336), buildings or foundations (292) – most often masonry (150) or frame-built (128), and artifact scatters (204). Privies, bridges, fords, isolated burials, and non-domestic agricultural features are not represented. All categories of historic cultural features recorded in the synthesis database are present at single-component sites of this period.

Post 1930 Sites

A total of 373 post-1930 sites are included in the synthesis database. The represents 42% of the 20th-century sample of synthesis sites. Most of these sites come from Prince George's (48), Anne Arundel (47), and Frederick (36) counties, as well as the City of Annapolis (37). There are 369 terrestrial sites and 4 fully submerged sites. Four of the terrestrial sites are described as partially submerged. Average distance to water remains comparable to the preceding period, with average distances of 189 and 291 meters for freshwater and saltwater locales respectively. The most oft recorded topographic settings for post 1930s sites are hillslopes (79 occurrences), which is clearly at odds with all other time periods. Low terraces on floodplains are also recorded frequently, along with hilltop and bluff locations, and upland flats. Local surface water is most often recorded to be a freshwater river or stream (236 occurrences), followed by estuarine bay or tidal river locations (105). Thirty-four sites have springs recorded on or near them. Legal compliance drove excavation work at 285 sites and pure research was the motivation for 63 sites. Of 373 sites tested statewide, 98 or about 26% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Single-component sites appear to be present in 301 cases, with domestic sites, again, being the most frequently reported site type (259 occurrences). Other common site types include buildings or foundations – particularly masonry (119) and frame built (102), artifact scatters (146), and farmsteads (100). Un-represented site types include privies, canal-related sites, bridges, fords, isolated burials, and non-domestic agricultural features. All categories of historic cultural features recorded in the synthesis database are present at single-component sites of this period.

Artifacts recovered include ceramics, glass, architectural items, furniture items, clothing items, activity items, miscellaneous faunal material, and possibly other unreported artifacts.

Historic Sites with Unknown/Uncertain Temporal Associations

There are thirty-one sites in the Archeological Synthesis Database. Many are listed as single-components sites, but that listing is based on isolated prehistoric components. Again, this is a cautionary tale for using this data. The brief descriptions provided in the following summary sheets for these “single-component sites” should make these instances clear, and it is incumbent upon the user of this dataset to look up individual site numbers in the synthesis dataset (available online) in those cases where the single-component designation does appear to apply to the historic occupation (see Section 1.0 above).

The 31 historic-period unknown sites represent less than 2.5% of the entire dataset of 1,242 sites. Many of these sites are primarily prehistoric sites, where incidental and non-diagnostic historic finds, or finds with long use-lives, were encountered. The greatest number of them are reported from the western shore coastal plain where the most archeological attention has been centered. Anne Arundel (6 sites), St. Mary’s (3), and Charles (3) county account for the bulk of that sample. However, both Frederick county (in the Eastern Piedmont), and Caroline county (on the Eastern Shore Coastal Plain) have produced 3 sites each. Twenty-eight sites are described as terrestrial and 3 are described as fully submerged. Freshwater locales are an average of 167 meters from surface water, while saltwater locales are an average of 360 meters away. Topographic settings reported reflect the general trend throughout the dataset of sites being situated most on low floodplain terraces, but several alternative settings are well-represented. Local surface water is described as a freshwater stream or river in 20 cases, and an estuarine bar or tidal river in 8 cases. Springs are present 3 times. Eighteen of the 31 instances are recorded as being encountered due to excavation for legal compliance. Of the such 31 sites tested statewide, 9 or 29% proceeded to a Phase III or data recovery-level of research. Twenty-one of these sites have single-component or isolated/discrete components and the site types reported include artifacts scatters (8 instances), industrial sites (6 instances), domestic sites (3), slave-related sites (3), maritime sites, quarries (2), buildings (2), burial areas (2), sepulchres (2), educational sites (1), and other contexts (8). Reported features include construction features, foundations, topographic features (depressions or mounds), burials, and other features.
